Admonitions addressed to him; and good wishes for concord, peace, prosperity, and a just and liberal rule, in his newly-founded city, . Etna. 1 HAIL, golden lyre, from whose resounding strings Apollo and the dark-haired Muses draw As from a treasure-house sweet stores of sound; To Thee, when stately dancers usher in The festive day, the obedient feet respond. 5 The notes from thy preluding chords struck out Control the mazy windings of the song. Tis thine, whenever the pointed lightnings flash, To quench the fiery bolt, and thine the power To quell the eagle on Joves sceptered hand. Dark clouds of slumber shroud his bended head; Beneath the potent charm his eyelids droop; His vigorous wing on either side drops down. While sleeps the King of Birds his yielding back Responsive to his breathing swells and falls; So great the mastery of...
